Thème :

<sup>suitcase</sup>

He could see a <sup>suitcase</sup> people and thin<sup>v</sup> at his client's address.

She was not a young ginger girl as he had imagined her but a quite thin old woman who was waiting on the doorway with her small leather luggage. She looked like a small doll from a landscape built around an electric train. She seemed stuck on the ground with a hat decorated with a flower. A <sup>small</sup> vintage hat from another time. She reminded her of her grandmother but she seemed more extravagant in her outfit.

She seemed reassured when she saw her taxi arriving.

Franck stopped the car just in front of the little garden and got out. He smiled at her and offered to put her suitcase of the car.

at the back of the car.

"Thank you young man, it's really nice of you", she said.

[...]

The suitcase was light. The woman must not <sup>neither</sup> go very far nor leave for a long time. A little week-end at her children's house?

A trip to the seaside?

Luke dit " Tes parents te tueraient. "

" Mes parents me tueraient dans tous les cas. Ils ont planifié ma vie ~~De manière assez automatique,~~ On regarda Dave comme par réflexe.

Son visage prit un air très réjoui. " Vous avez encore <sup>avoir</sup> besoin de

Et personne ne demanda pourquoi il voulait partir de chez lui.

Des sociétaires y avaient été venus.

Ils étaient quatre sur cinq.

Luke dit, " Et Jeff alors ? "

Et le visage de Maurice se figea. " Je n'y vais pas sans Jeff "

Question 1.

According to Jessica Studdert, the 2020 worldwide pandemic strengthened the links between people and councils because local institutions and initiatives managed to help them more than the national government did.

Indeed, first of all, local institutions can act more for people in the extent that the virus spread locally. They could deliver food and basic products, even outside the Covid-19 context, directly to people like for example treat sage because they know what people need whereas national governments weren't even able to deliver tests as it had promised. Besides, it is more financing the private sector than the public one. /

Then, the fact that local initiatives are led by volunteers neighbours insures the human link with local populations whereas the central government only imposes strict restrictions without taking care of the mental health of citizens. Councils listened and understood the needs of the population and they did their best to prevent them from being alone by delivering them smart tablets so as to communicate with their family. <sup>for instance,</sup>

To conclude, people feel abandoned by the national government and councils as well as local initiatives fulfill this emptiness by helping them materially but also mentally. They can do it because they understand / better what local population need. <sup>genuinely</sup>

Question 2.

When French people realized the government had burnt a lot of masks from the latter SARS epidemic before covid-19 because it was too expensive to stock, the confidence <sup>they had</sup> in the national government dramatically decreased.

On the one hand, I explain such a phenomenon by the increasing inability of governments / to do what they say, especially during the sanitary crisis. For instance, the European Union promised to be on time for the tests and vaccines' delivery, but it couldn't manage to do it. People increasingly mistrust politicians and they are above all worried and uncertain about the future / because governments can't insure them they will get a new job for example.

On the other hand, <sup>I think</sup> people feel manipulated by governments because a lot of information about the sanitary crisis is kept confidential. This lack of confidence gained momentum with the Pierre Borne's documentary dubbed Hold-up which claims that the government / is lying to the citizens and, including, invented the virus to reduce ~~the~~ individual freedoms. Such conspiracy theories are directly due to *

To conclude, I know that, <sup>I believe that</sup> not every citizen is convinced of that but both governmental mistake in the pandemic gestion and conspiracy theories create a / general lack of confidence for the coming time.
